

Value Drivers: Establishing Realistic Growth Strategies

Buyers tend to pay premium prices for companies that have developed realistic strategies for growth. This growth strategy must be communicated to a potential buyer so that the buyer can see specific reasons why cash flow (and the business itself) should grow after it is acquired. The growth strategy is illustrated in pro forma statements that are used by buyers (and their investment bankers) to create a discounted future cash flow valuation of your company. Since future cash flow is based on estimates of future growth, having a realistic growth strategy can be vital to reaping top dollar for your business. This strategy can be based upon:

- Industry dynamics
- Historical growth
- Increased demand for the company's products (due to population growth or other factors)
- New products and new product lines
- Expansion through augmenting territory, product lines, manufacturing capacity, etc.

Don't expect buyers to appreciate the growth opportunities your company offers unless you speak convincingly about it. First, a buyer will not understand your business as well as you do, and will not likely see its hidden opportunities. Also, if a buyer does discover an opportunity that it believes you have ignored, the buyer will likely attempt to take advantage of that knowledge during purchase price negotiations. It is a good idea to demonstrate that you are aware of the opportunity.

Even if you plan to sell tomorrow, you should have a written plan describing future growth potential and how that growth can be achieved based on the areas listed above, as well as any other catalysts for future growth unique to your business. It is that growth plan, properly communicated, that will help attract buyers. If you're not a short-timer; meaning that you and your business have a few years or more before an expected sale, it is worthwhile to create more than a growth plan: consider creating a strategic business plan. For an example, let's look at this hypothetical case study.

When business owner Jane Martin first met with her Exit Planning Professional to discuss increasing value drivers to prepare for the sale of her business in three to five years, she was unsure how to develop a

Michael Wildeveld, CEPA, M&AMI,
CM&AP, CM&AA, CBI, CBB
michaelw@veldma.com

Veld Mergers & Acquisitions
www.veldma.com
1 Park Plaza, 600
Irvine, CA 92614
310-652-8066

business growth plan that was comprehensive, actionable and supported her overall exit goals. Jane's advisor started the process by first bringing in a business consultant who discussed how growth plans come from strategic plans, which form the foundation of a solid business. Jane's advisor and business consultant suggested that she create a strategic plan that was based on data gleaned from Jane's customers, vendors, trade journals and other miscellaneous data the company had collected.

With the direction of an experienced Exit Planning Professional, Jane was able to create a strategic business plan that not only aligned with her company's vision (your future direction), mission (the reason your business exists), values (your guiding principles) and goals (wishes and deadlines), but the plan also presented strategies and action steps that her company needed to take to achieve the stated goals. These strategies and action steps were tied to the company's budget. They also supported Jane's (and the company's) overall direction for building value and setting the foundation for Jane's successful exit.

Similar to Jane Martin's story, most business owners have difficulty developing comprehensive strategic plans by themselves that really drive business and align the essential elements. If you are like many owners, you may confuse strategic plans with marketing plans or take the time to write a great plan without knowing how to get it off the paper and into action. That is why it is important to elicit the help of an experienced Exit Planning Professional to guide you through key actions to develop a strategic plan. These key action items include:

1. Collecting data: including industry projections, financial performance, customer data, employee satisfaction, sociological, technological and economic development data.
2. Developing a vision.
3. Affirming the mission.
4. Articulating corporate values.
5. Developing goals and objectives.
6. Drafting an inventory of strategies.
7. Prioritizing the strategies.
8. Developing action plans for each strategy naming an "owner" for each action and tying each plan to resource allocations and budgets.
9. Developing a set of measures to monitor progress.

Any opportunity you have to include your management team and employees in developing any part of this written plan helps to keep them involved as stakeholders. After you have worked with your management team and an experienced Exit Planning Professional to create and document your growth strategy, the next step to creating a company with strong value drivers is to establish reliable financial controls to manage your business.

If you have any questions about strategies for increasing the value of your business prior to your exit, please contact us to discuss your particular situation. We can help guide you through the process of identifying the current value drivers in your business and creating a road map for increasing value to meet your overall exit objectives.

The information contained in this article is general in nature and is not legal, tax or financial advice. For information regarding your particular situation, contact an attorney or a tax or financial professional. The information in this newsletter is provided with the understanding that it does not render legal, accounting, tax or financial advice. In specific cases, clients should consult their legal, accounting, tax or financial professional. This article is not intended to give advice or to represent our firm as being qualified to give advice in all areas of professional services. Exit Planning is a discipline that typically requires the collaboration of multiple professional advisors. To the extent that our firm does not have the expertise required on a particular matter, we will always work closely with you to help you gain access to the resources and professional advice that you need.

This is an opt-in newsletter published by Business Enterprise Institute, Inc., and presented to you by our firm. We appreciate your interest.

Any examples provided are hypothetical and for illustrative purposes only. Examples include fictitious names and do not represent any particular person or entity.

©2022 Business Enterprise Institute, Inc. All rights reserved.